This form may be used by a self-represented individual who is:

1. Found to be a vexatious litigant by a North Dakota state court; and
2. Subject to a pre-filing order.

As a vexatious litigant representing yourself, you're required to apply in writing to get court approval before you can file any documents in an existing case or file new litigation.

File this completed, dated, and signed application form, and the documents you're requesting to file as follows:

- If you're applying for permission to file new documents in your existing case, file with the court in the district where the existing case is filed. Use the same case number. This application form must be filed separately from the documents you're requesting to file.
- If you're applying for permission to start new litigation, file with the court in the district where you plan to file the new case. A new case number will be assigned if the filing is granted. This application form must be filed separately from the documents you're requesting to file.
- If you E-File, file this application separately from the documents you're requesting to file. The application will be filed and docketed, if it meets the requirements for E-Filing. When you submit the documents you're requesting to file, they're printed and put into a separate file for the judge to review. Then, the documents you're requesting to E-File are rejected with a note that they won't be filed until your application is granted.

After your application is filed, a judge of the court may allow you to file your new documents, or file a new case, ONLY IF it appears that your document(s) or new case have merit and aren't being filed for the purpose of harassment or delay.
